

National AccessAbility Week

May 25 to June 1

National AccessAbility Week highlights the importance of accessibility and inclusion, grounded in the social model of disability. This perspective emphasizes that barriers are created by society rather than by an individual's impairments.

The week focuses on advancing accessible environments, technologies, and services that remove these barriers, enabling full participation for people with disabilities.

Events such as workshops and community initiatives urge society to take responsibility for creating inclusive spaces. National AccessAbility Week challenges societal structures that limit accessibility.
